

ICB Conference 2009

Dinner and Awards

Thursday 26th November

The Dorchester

KENSINGTON PALACE

I wish the Institute of Certified Bookkeepers every success for its inaugural conference and very much look forward to attending the dinner and awards ceremony. The Institute, ever since its inception, has contributed significantly to good business practice, particularly amongst small and medium sized enterprises, and I am delighted to support this in my role as Patron.

I am delighted to welcome the Institute of Certified Bookkeepers, its members and delegates, to London for the ICB's conference dinner. I heartily support the work the ICB has done in establishing formal qualifications for bookkeeping, and its excellent progress in promoting the bookkeeping profession. I hope this dinner concludes an informative and stimulating first day at conference.

The Institute of Certified Bookkeepers was created in 1996 and today is firmly established as the world's leading bookkeeping organisation. It promotes and maintains the standards of bookkeeping as a profession. It provides a series of relevant qualifications and awards grades of membership that recognise academic attainment and working experience.

The Institute's objectives are:

- to promote bookkeeping as a profession
- to enable bookkeeping to gain recognition as a vital part of the financial profession
 - to promote training in the principles of bookkeeping
- to develop personal study skills and improve the confidence of those persons who undertake a course in bookkeeping
 - to enable the achievement of a qualification, which may be used to enhance prospects for progression into higher levels of study
 - to improve the career prospects of its members
- to support and encourage its members throughout their bookkeeping careers

Consultation with commerce and industry has confirmed and amplified the Institute's assessment of the need for qualified bookkeepers. Employers both large and small have shown full support for the objectives of The Institute of Certified Bookkeepers. The Institute is appointed by HM Treasury as a Supervisory Body under the Money Laundering Regulations.
